

Dean Gladish
Period 6, Monday
"Men at Forty" by Donald Justice

Men at forty
Learn to close softly
The doors to rooms they will not be Coming back to.

At rest on a stair landing, 5
They feel it
Moving beneath them now like the deck of a ship,
Though the swell is gentle.

And deep in mirrors
They rediscover 10
The face of the boy as he practices tying
His father's tie there in secret

And the face of that father,
Still warm with the mystery of lather.
They are more fathers than sons themselves now. 15
Something is filling them, something

That is like the twilight sound
Of the crickets, immense,
Filling the woods at the foot of the slope
Behind their mortgaged houses. 20